Stephen and Rose were among the best students in entrepreneurship class in the University of Kabianga. While in the university Stephen was commonly known for doing minor business deals with his colleagues while Rose was the author of a popular column entitled "Kazi ni Kazi" in the University magazine. They claimed that these assignments sufficiently supported their financial obligations. However, when they finished University they had different thoughts and opinions.

After remaining unemployed for some time Stephen approached a relative who lend him Ksh 100,000 to start a security firm in Kakamega town. He is convinced that his business will break- even and grow within a short time unlike those of his friends which closed down after only one year in the same industry. His argument is that since Kakamega town has become an economic hub several people will need security of their businesses and what he only needs is to rebrand those businesses that were being run by his friends and make the services available even to the local shop owners.

Rose who similarly remained unemployed for sometime, felt starting a business would be a risky option and hence chose to be employed as a clerk in a fairly busy organization, where she has now worked for 2 years. In her first year of employment she brought together fellow clerks and they managed to introduce a defect checking system of the raw materials and finished goods as they enter and leave the organization respectively. Through her efforts the organization has since started a business outlet in the neighbouring town.
